IN BOSTON MARKETS.

Butter Is Quiet, Receipts are Light and Prices Steady.
Boston, Jan. 20.—There is little change to note in the local market for dairy products. Butter is quiet, but receipts are light and prices are steady, although the feeling in fresh goods is rather easy, as the supply is somewhat in excess of wants, due to the almost general use of storage butter. The demand for cheese does not improve much, but supplies, especially of fancy York state twins, are moderate and prices are well sustained. The receipts of fresh eggs are somewhat larger and the demand is only moderately active, but this is the kind of weather when the production is light and dealers are disposed to hold their goods quite firmly. Fancy storage eggs are firm purely because they are scarce.
Quotations follow:
Butter—Fancy northern creamery tubs 32@33 1/2c, boxes and prints 34@34 1/2c, western ash tubs 31@32c, fancy storage 31@32c, dairy 27@28c.
Cheese—York state twins, fancy 15@16 1/2c fair to good 13@14c. Vermont twins, fancy 14@14 1/2c fair to good 12@13 1/2c.
Eggs—Fancy hennessy 38@40c, choice eastern 35@36c, fresh western 35@37c, storage, April extras 31@32c. May 30@31c.

WHY SOME FAIL WITH SHEEP.

Too Many Neglect to Study Conditions on Which Success Depends.

Why is it that some make a success of whatever they undertake, and others, seemingly laboring under equally favorable circumstances, fail? In every walk of life we note people crowning their efforts with marked success, while only a few steps away a neighbor, apparently exerting as much mental and physical effort, is gradually slipping down the incline that leads to partial or total failure. There are people—some I personally know—who believe that it is the plan of the Creator that some men should walk easily and uninterruptedly to the goal of success, that they may afford examples for those who are less fortunate, says a writer in the New York Tribune Farmer. I do not pretend to know how the Creator has planned the development of the industrial world. Possibly some people are born, like Moses of ancient times, to achieve honor and marked success. I am inclined to look upon the situation from the point of view of the old adage, "God helps the man who helps himself." However, we are all ready to concede that there are people born with more natural ability than others along certain lines and who with equal efforts achieve greater success. On the other hand, we observe the achievements of those who are not gifted with any marked talent, but who set out with persistently labor against great odds and ultimately reach success.

What we find in one line of industrial activity, we also find in other lines. Sheep husbandry is no exception to the rule. On every hand we observe instances where men are achieving success in handling sheep, building up fine flocks utilizing them to restore and improve the fertility of their farms and causing them to return a handsome profit. In the same community we find other instances where sheep raising is followed possibly on an adjoining farm, yet with the opposite results. What is the cause of the difference? You may ask. Is it a fact that the first man mentioned was born a shepherd, and therefore he has been more successful with sheep than his neighbor? No, I am inclined to think not. In my many years of study of sheep raising on the farm, and the methods employed by flock owners, I am inclined to conclude the reason why some fail is that they do not learn how to handle sheep. An instance has been under my observation for the last three years. One of my neighbors bought a few sheep to lay the foundation of a flock. I knew the sheep he bought, as they had been pasturing in another neighbor's field adjoining my farm.

The first neighbor after buying the sheep took them home and during the winter gave them the run of a large field that in one corner had an old shed that had been used for several years for storing machinery, it had an open front, exposed to the west. All the sheep had for protection the first winter was this shed and a rail fence. However, to my surprise, the sheep came through the winter better than could have been expected, and dropped a nice lot of lambs. The last season this neighbor has been letting his sheep run at will, and whenever they stray from home he goes after them on horseback and brings them back on a run. A day or two ago he informed me that he was going out of the sheep business this fall as the sheep do not pay.

Instances similar to the above are common in every community this is a good illustration of how some farmers attempt profitable sheep raising. The high price of flock products not infrequently stimulates farmers who have been following some other method of farming to go into sheep raising without first considering whether or not they are adapted to the business. To go into sheep raising simply on the strength of favorable market conditions is placing one on the direct road to practical failure. I have yet to find the man who is raising sheep simply from the standpoint of a financial proposition who has made a market success. The sheep business requires some thing more than the mere investment of a few dollars.

It demands persistent study and thoughtful painstaking management to make the business a success. The farmer who goes into sheep raising, thinking they will look after themselves during the larger portion of the year, is harboring an impression that ultimately will bring him disappointment. Too much must not be expected of sheep. They are the most gentle and easily handled of domestic animals, yet at the same time they require ill treatment. A great many fail with sheep just on this account. They buy a few head to start in the business without giving thought to the kind of management essential to produce good results. There are seasons of the year when demand close attention. If they are neglected at these times, no matter how good the treatment may be hereafter, only partial success can at best be realized.

Warmth Without Weight.

As one-third of our lives is spent in bed, we ought to take advantage of any improvements that make sleep more healthful and restful. There is a new comfort now that is entirely different from any other we have ever seen. It is so much lighter than the sleeper has no sense of weight upon him, yet is perfectly warm on the coldest night. People using these comforts say they can be compared only to the genuine eider-down of long ago. Every reader ought to see and feel them. Simply ask for the Malm Laminated Cotton Down Comfort at Perry's.
